Note from the Editor

Working on a publication where the articles come from a variety of disciplines presented me with a number of decisions to make as an editor. Because all of the authors are undergraduates, some of whom are still learning to master their discipline's style guidelines, the Program staff and I decided that each student should use the guidelines associated with his or her discipline. The result of this decision is that the articles included in this publication are split between using MLA, APA, and Chicago style guidelines. In an effort to create consistency throughout the publication, however, I have normalized certain aspects across disciplines. Thus all the articles use the word 'and' versus an ampersand; all the headings and sub-headings are formatted the same way; and all the charts, graphs, and photographs are labeled as figures.
