

LOEX QUARTERLY

Affiliated with Eastern Michigan University's Bruce T. Halle Library

Volume 35, Number 4, Winter 2009

In this issue of the Quarterly, we feature a review of a book, "e-Learning and the Science of Instruction," that has relatively recently come out in a new edition. I used the first edition of this book extensively when I started designing screencasts/online tutorials a few years ago and I did not even know an updated edition was out until it was brought to my attention. I found the first edition a worthwhile book and hopefully you will find this review helpful in determining whether you should take a closer look at the latest edition.

Additionally in this Quarterly, there is an article on utilizing a Web 2.0 tool, delicious.com, to help students participate in the construction of their own learning and also an article about continually improving your instruction while gaining the confidence to cede some control. In "TechMatters" there is an overview of what in the world is a web widget and, finally, another installment of Ross' Rave.

In the next issue of the Quarterly, we will discuss the LOEX 2009 conference in Albuquerque along with future LOEX conferences in 2010 and 2011. Until then...

Happy instructing,

Brad Sietz
Director
