

Campus Capsules

Nominations for candidates for honorary degrees to be awarded at the 1975 Winter Commencement will be accepted in the office of the secretary to the Board of Regents, 141 Pierce Hall, now through October 20.

The deadline for automatic class withdrawals for undergraduate students is Tuesday, Nov. 11. Beginning Nov. 12, withdrawals are not automatic. To be considered for a late withdrawal, the student must be evaluated by the instructor as earning an A, B or C at the time of the request, or the student must present written verification of emergency circumstances which prevent him/her from completing the course. Withdrawal forms may be picked up at the Academic Services Center, 229 Pierce Hall. Total withdrawal from all classes for the term should be initiated at the Registration Office, Briggs Hall.

The EMU Forensics Team, in its first competition of the season, won the Hilltopper Tournament held at Western Kentucky University Oct. 3 and 4. The EMU team won a total of 99 points, more than three times the point total of second place Bowling Green University. Twenty-three schools competed in the tournament.

The EMU Alumni Association cordially invites Huron fans to attend the "Instant Replay" Cocktail Reception immediately following the Homecoming football game Saturday, Oct. 18. The cash bar reception will be held at the Crystal House, 3250 Washtenaw, in the King Arthur Room.

Jim Copp, a 1965 graduate of EMU and mathematics teacher and head wrestling coach at Lee M. Thurston High School in Northville, spent five weeks this summer in the Dominican Republic coaching the national youth and adult wrestling teams. At the request of the Dominican Secretariat of Sports and the Wrestling Federation, Copp was sent to the Dominican Republic to prepare the nation's top young wrestlers for the World Youth Wrestling Championship, held in the Dominican Republic July 28 through August 3. The Dominican team placed sixth among the 16 nations participating, winning one gold and one bronze medal in the 13 events.

The first mainstage theatre production of the year, "A Flea in Her Ear," directed by Prof. James Fousseff, continues this week Wednesday through Saturday at 8 p.m. in Quirk Auditorium. General Admission is $2.50; students with an I.D. are admitted for $1.75.

Brian Harris of the University of Queensland will discuss current business and economics in Australia at 2 p.m. on Friday in 201 Pray-Harold. He is currently on an Australian Government Management Fellowship doing additional graduate work and lecturing at Michigan State University. The lecture is free and open to the public.

Presidential Commission on Future of EMU Named, Begins Work

The newly-appointed members of the Presidential Commission on the Future of Eastern Michigan University met for the first time Tuesday, Oct. 7, and received their charge from University President James H. Brickley.

Appointed to the Commission were faculty members Doris Kilanski, assistant professor of educational leadership; James McDonald, professor of geography and geology; Alister MacDonald, assistant professor of curriculum and instruction; Bruce Nelson, professor of educational leadership; John Stoffels, associate professor of accounting and finance; Stewart Work, professor of chemistry; and Mary Ida Yost, assistant professor of music.

Also appointed were Joanne Burns, assistant director of the Career Planning and Placement Center; Henry James Rokusek, head of the Department of Industrial Education; and Ira Wheatley, head of the Department of History and Philosophy.

Student members of the Commission are Brian Moore, a junior from Detroit majoring in speech, and Anita Regalado, a junior from Vassar, Mich., majoring in medical technology.

Alumni will be represented on the Commission by Paul Shoemaker, retired superintendent of the Redford Union School District and a 1932 graduate of EMU. He is also a member of the Alumni Board of Directors.

Faculty members on the Commission were recommended by the Faculty Senate and the EMU Chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP). The student members were recommended by Student Government and the alumni representative by the EMU Alumni Association.

Dr. Work will serve as chairman of the Commission and Dr. Walter Moss, associate professor of history and philosophy, as full-time executive staff director. The Commission's office is located in 320 Goodison Hall. The telephone number there is 487-1077.

President Brickley told the Commission that "I see each of you as bringing a very special talent and perspective to the Commission's work. At the same time, I view each of you as having the depth and independence of judgment to place the needs and goals of the total University above the particular discipline or segment of the University to which you are attached."

He charged the Commission with "the responsibility for taking a close look at all aspects of University life, particularly its academic programs at both the undergraduate and graduate levels. I would ask you to feel free to draw upon all University resources in the completion of your work and to create special task forces as needed to assist in your deliberations. I would expect you to have your recommendations finalized not later than Aug. 31, 1976. Furthermore, I would hope your deliberations would include a brief survey of the University's past and present role, with delineation of major strengths and weaknesses, assets and limitations; a statement of the University's mission, objectives and priorities for the late 70's and early 80's; and finally, detailed recommendations relating to the needed means, strategies and new directions for realizing these institutional goals during the designated time period."

"I do not have to remind you that the thoroughness and objectivity of your deliberations will, to a large extent, determine the acceptability of your recommendations. While the Board of Regents, of course, has the ultimate authority and responsibility for determining policy, they too have high hopes for the work of your Commission and look forward to receiving, studying and considering your recommendations."

Homecoming Plans Set

"Happy Birthday, America" is the theme of a full week's activities which will mark EMU's annual Homecoming. It begins with a free dance Sunday evening, Oct. 12, and ends with the Homecoming Parade and football game Saturday, Oct. 18.

A dance at 8 p.m. Sunday in Bowen Field House will feature The Whiz Kids and Windjammer. It is free and open to the public.

At 8 p.m. Monday, Oct. 13, in Pease Auditorium the Office of Student Life will present Doug Kershaw, an electric fiddle virtuoso who is appearing on 30 campuses in the Great Lakes region. Tickets will be available at the door for $.50.

A talent show which will present candidates for Homecoming Queen will begin at 8 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 14, on the stage of Pease Auditorium. Five finalists from a field of 15 candidates - 14 girls and a lone male, Mickey Bakst - will perform before an audience and six judges, all unaffiliated with the University.

Thursday, the annual Powder Puff football game will be played at 7 p.m. on the Intramural Field, to be followed by a pep rally and bon fire on the Towers Field at 9 p.m. Included in this event will be the corps of EMU cheerleaders and the EMU Huron Marching Band, conducted by Thomas Tyra, professor of music.

Voting for the Homecoming Queen and her court will take place Friday.

"Chicago" will be featured in a concert at 8 p.m. Friday, Oct. 17, in Bowen Field House. Tickets at $7 for reserved seats and $6 for general admission are still available at the McKenny Union ticket office or at Mr. Music in the Briarwood Mall.

Beginning Friday afternoon, and running Saturday and Sunday, the Kappa Karnival will be held behind Bowen Field House. Sponsored by the Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity, the event will offer rides, games, displays and food concessions.

Residence halls will compete in a building decoration contest with cash prizes going to the winners. Judging, based on the appropriate use of the American birthday theme, will take place Friday afternoon.

The Homecoming Parade will begin at 10 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 18, at the corner of Lowell and Forest. The route is south on Hamilton, west on Cross St. to Washtenaw, north on Oakwood into the campus. The parade will disband near Downing Hall. Included will be some 25 bands, many floats emphasizing the bicentennial theme and antique cars. Grand marshal of the parade will be Frank J. Kelley, Michigan's 50th attorney general. First appointed to the office in 1962, Kelley has been reelected in four succeeding elections.

An alumni luncheon will be served in a tent near Rynearson Stadium before the football game when EMU will meet Northern Michigan University. The game begins at 1:30 p.m. Halftime activities will include the crowning of the homecoming queen.

FOCUS ON faculty:

Robert DelCampo: One of Few Male Home Economists

By Brad Simmons

"I'm a home economist, and I'm proud of it," says Assistant Professor Robert L. DelCampo, the newest faculty member in the Department of Home Economics.

According to Department Head Billie Lou Sands, Dr. DelCampo is one of the only true male home economists in the United States.

The 26-year-old DelCampo says many of his colleagues who teach courses in the family life area of home economics departments like to call themselves sociologists or family life experts instead of home economists.

"It would have been easy for me to go that route," he says. "When I was first applying to graduate schools, I was living in a fraternity house. I got quite a bit of mail from home economics departments, and the guys chided me about it.

"I was faced with a decision — I could either downplay home economics, or be active in the family life area and really show people that this is an important part of the total home economics field. I said 'Hey, I'm going to be a home economist — now what are the implications of this?'"

Dr. DelCampo says he wants to break down the stereotypical view of the home economics field.

"It's not all cooking and sewing," he says. "It's giving people a better preparation of the total expectation of what family living is all about."

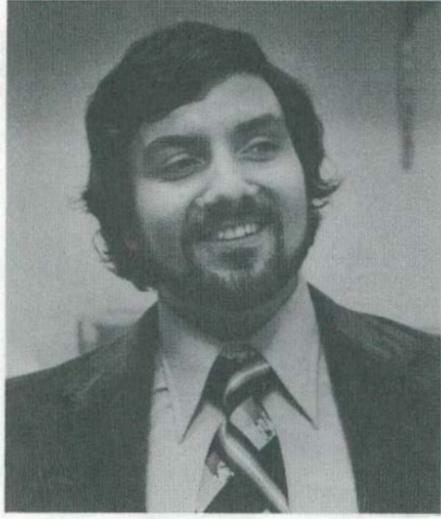

In order to facilitate an understanding of this "Total expectation," home economics includes the study of clothing and textiles, foods and nutrition, housing and family life at EMU.

Although a study of child development and family relations could be found in many disciplines, Dr. DelCampo says the approach is different in home economics.

"We take an integrative approach to problem-solving," he says. "We're able to use things from psychology, sociology, education and adult ed.

"Although we deal with the theoretical approach, the focus is on a functional approach. After we discuss the theory, we encourage students to interpret it and put it to practical use."

Dr. DelCampo earned his bachelor's degree from the State University of New York at Cortland, where he was preparing to be a mathematics teacher. He then earned a master's degree in home economics from Virginia Polytechnical Institute and State University. He received his Ph.D. in home economics from Florida State University last July. He has been a member of the EMU faculty for only one month, but has five years of college teaching experience under his belt (he taught "Personal Development in the Family" at Virginia Tech at age 21).

As an expert on family life, he adamantly defends the family as "a viable and integral part of a larger society."

"The family is not disintegrating," he says, "it just has to catch up with the rapid technological change of the last 30 years.

"Families used to sit around potbellied stoves to get warm," he explains. "They HAD to interact and they got to know each other as people.

"But central heating has helped break down interpersonal family relationships. By wearing stereo headphones or watching TV, you can cut yourself off from the rest of the family — it's much easier to 'escape' now.

"This has been a shock to the family — it needs to catch up."

Through teaching with a community emphasis, Dr. DelCampo hopes to prepare his students to help families do some catching up.

"This is a people-oriented profession," he says. "We're dealing with people on a gut-level — we're helping them in a practical way. And this is in line with my own personal direction and lifestyle."

STUDENT SENATE ROUNDUP

The Student Senate on Sept. 30:
Approved the appointment of Valerie Bean as treasurer of the Student Senate.

Approved the appointments of Stephanie Nelson and Kevin Lambert to the Disciplinary Review Board.

Approved the appointment of Jesse Johnston as Director of the Office of Legal Services.

Approved the appointment of Richard Gienapp as Director of the Student Defenders Union.

Heard a talk by two student representatives from Oakland University concerning tuition hikes and subsequently passed a resolution providing that the Student Senate immediately mobilize its efforts in an attempt to keep tuition from being increased in future terms, to immediately begin working with other state university governments and the Michigan Higher Education Student Association in an attempt to bring about a realignment of the fiscal year 1975 budget appropriations to higher education, and to continue in an effort to change priorities of the state legislature to avoid any future tuition increases.

Defeated a motion to boycott the inauguration of University President James H. Brickley.

Passed a resolution to consolidate the Interfraternity and Panhellenic Council seats into a Greek Council Seat.

Passed a resolution to recommend that married housing families be given rights equal to those given regular students and that a reasonable adjustment fee be charged to married students to implement the recommendation.

Bicentennial Notes

The Bicentennial Observance Committee for EMU has met regularly since August. It is composed of a cross section of faculty, students and administrators. The committee chairman is Gary Hawks, vice-president for university relations, assisted by Mitchell Osadchuk, assistant to the vice-president for university relations.

Many programs and events have been suggested, but those presently under serious consideration are:

1. Numerous exhibits under the sponsorship of various departments, the Center of Educational Resources and the Instructional Museum Committee.

2. A series of youth debates relating to the bicentennial celebration, to be held early in 1976.

3. A scheduled visit of Artrain to Ypsilanti during the celebration.

4. Display of the special bicentennial flag. One of these has been made by a student, Pamela Tweedie, who is a member of the committee.

5. A summer workshop for teachers on the contributions of Blacks to American life and culture.

6. Having EMU designated as a Bicentennial Institution.

7. Publication of a periodical-type booklet providing suggestions to schools about programs and ideas for celebrating the bicentennial, along with useful information for the classroom.

8. "Bicentennial Minutes" broadcast by WEMU, the campus radio station.

9. Emphasize the Bicentennial Year at all conferences held on campus throughout the year.

10. Dinner theater presentations featuring dramas based on historical aspects of the country's development.

Invitations have been sent to all departments asking for suggestions for the committee and for their involvement. The Department of History and Philosophy has already held a departmental seminar exploring the meaning of the bicentennial. Other suggestions from individuals and groups should be directed to Mitchell Osadchuk, 218 Pierce Hall.

SPECIAL PROJECTS AND RESEARCH DEVELOPMENT

The following opportunities for program development are currently available:

Health Services Research — PHS

A service fellowship program to attract researchers with experience in health-related fields and to help in the development of junior researchers has been established by the Public Health Service's National Center for Health Services Research.

Three kinds of fellowships are offered for an initial 13 months, with the possibility of extension for up to a maximum of four years: senior, staff and junior. A senior fellow is responsible for formulating and guiding a research attack on problems that are critical obstacles to progress or development in areas of special health delivery concern. Staff fellows are responsible for formulating and conducting a systematic research attack on a problem area of considerable scope and complexity. Junior fellows will be involved as part of teams with senior and staff fellows.

All applicants for service fellowships must submit a detailed resume, including area of special interest, articles or books they have published, and names of references. Arrangements will be made for personal interviews with the applicants.

Gifted and Talented Program

Proposals are due November 14, 1975 for grants to institutions of higher education to provide training to leadership personnel for the education of gifted and talented children and youth through graduate training programs, internships, and training institutes under the Special Projects Act of the Higher Education Amendments.

CENTER OF EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES

Creative Use of Film Magnifies Learning

Talking to Prof. Frank Ross of the English Language and Literature Department about using film creatively in the classroom is an instant workshop.

His resourcefulness with film, and other media, flow directly from his strongest commitment as a teacher, which is to train the imagination of his students to be creative.

In composition courses, for example, Prof. Ross shows part of a film, then gives class members the assignment of writing a finish to the story line.

"After their papers are written, I never show the ending of the film," Prof. Ross said, "because if I did, most of the students would think it was the only right ending. In their own minds, this would downgrade the endings which they themselves had written, and this is precisely what I avoid."

In a literature class, Prof. Ross uses film "to provide a sense of immediacy to language that was written long ago." Among the Media Services' collection of 1,000 films, there are many that "convey this feeling of currency to a past era." One is John Steinbeck's The Great American Novel: Grapes of Wrath.

"Some instructors whose ages range in the 40's and 50's find it difficult to realize that today's students look upon Steinbeck's description of the dust bowl as ancient history. For the students, it could just as well have happened 200 years ago. Through the film, they are able to listen to the narrator's words of Steinbeck as they watch present day Kentucky farmers being driven off their impoverished land and migrating to Chicago, only to find indifference, poverty and a soul-searing existence.

"The words of the novel, as heard on the sound track, can be used to show the kinship with the actual problems of today."

Prof. Ross pointed out that the film on the Steinbeck novel also can be used effectively in history and art classes and by other academic departments.

Citing another example of the use of film, he said, "You can lecture at great length trying to convey to students what Restoration Comedy is like — what this period in the development of English literature was like. But you can't do as good a job as 20 minutes of film in which the manners and affectations of the age come through instantaneously. This is a case where a short film is worth more than a 50-minute lecture."

We must remember, Prof. Ross emphasized, that "our students have grown up in a different age from most of the faculty. We formulated our skills and responses to stimuli in a different way. Unlike us, our students were raised before a TV set and conditioned to react to visual stimuli. If that's the way they come to us learning about the world, we ought to reach for this avenue that is clear and open.

"We should remember, too, that the best learning gets done if the student does it himself. Second-best is if you can show him how. The least learning occurs in the desperation of teacher-telling.

"We are fortunate on this campus to have services available to us to let us teach by showing. Only one thing annoys me. Each year more and more instructors use these facilities. Now I have to wait 15 minutes to be served where in the past it was done instantaneously."

In the 1974-75 academic year, the AV projectionist staff served faculty with 2,969 classroom showings of titles out of the Media Services collection of 1,000 films. An additional 1,857 films were rented from film libraries across the country to meet the requests of EMU faculty.

In the third full week of the current fall semester, a total of 138 films were shown to EMU classes. Making sure that each film arrives in the right classroom at the right time is the responsibility of Charles Walker, AV distribution services coordinator.

Walker supervises and trains a staff of approximately one dozen student projectionists. There is also a full-time staff

The 4-H Exploration Days Conference will be at Hoyt Conference Center Friday and Saturday, Oct. 17 and 18.

Katie Grove: One of Few Female Trainers

Katie Grove

By Jeanne Jordan

"Mostly what I see all day are feet." Katie Grove, a trainer in the EMU Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation since January, 1975, continued by saying: "Since working with the men's athletic teams I have seen more upper body injuries than I ever had before because most female athletic injuries occur in the ankles and knees. With the hard contact sports, men have more shoulder problems."

Katie holds a degree in physical education with pre-physical therapy emphasis from the University of Montana and a master's degree from Indiana State University in physical education with specialization in athletic training. Only two graduate schools in the country, the University of Arizona and Indiana, offer degrees for athletic trainers, and when she entered, only Indiana accepted women students. Until Michigan State University hired a woman this fall, Katie was the only woman trainer in the state.

"The most difficult athletes to treat are those on the cross country team. They have painful symptoms but no visible injuries and it is often hard to guess what will relieve the strain which is causing their discomfort. I end up trying a metatarsal pad here or there and if it works for one, I may try the same treatment for another runner with the same symptoms. We build up and pad their shoes which will be worn for running maybe 20 miles a day every day."

She and an assistant, Sandy Adair, are primarily responsible for the welfare of the women's intercollegiate teams. When she travels with the teams she carries a medical bag. In addition, she has found it necessary to take along chemical ice as girls' athletic facilities in most colleges are still inadequate.

"I am trying very hard to treat visiting teams who come here to compete so well that they will go home and encourage their institutions to improve facilities. If they just say often enough that they wish they could have as good treatment as they received at Eastern, maybe all visiting women's teams will then benefit."

Katie feels that using the same trainers and facilities helps to foster good relations between the men's and women's teams, and adds: "I see no need for separate facilities. Most of the men now accept me as a trainer and don't think I am a nurse."

"During the early fall football practice period when the team had two-a-day workouts, I worked from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. taping all the freshmen. During the regular season, Sandy and I help with the taping from 1 to 2:30 p.m. but male trainers and male student assistants work at the scheduled games."

With her physical therapy and rehabilitation background, Katie began her graduate studies as a trainer by taking classes in taping, courses in care of specific injuries and by fulfilling her assignment as the trainer for a season for one Indiana State team. Since gymnastics and field hockey are the most injury-prone sports, many of the graduate students are assigned to work with these.

In addition to graduate study, officially recognized trainers must first present qualifications, then must pass a national certification test administered by the National Athletic Trainers Association.

The Eastern Michigan training staff, with Ronald Venis as head trainer and Gary Strickland and Katie Grove as assistant trainers, is supplemented by EMU students who are studying training as a specialization for their degrees in physical education.

"I have found the women coaches very receptive to my being here. It takes a big load off their shoulders to have me decide that a girl has only a slight strain and she can still play or that she has a more serious condition and should not perform."

"In addition, I have set up conditioning programs for team members. Right now the women's volleyball team is working lifting weights in a training program to build, not their muscles, but their strength and endurance."

"One of my projects is to make the women coaches and athletes more aware of the need for conditioning and I feel that we are now on the way as all of them are using our facilities more than formerly."

"Another of my aims is to explain in more detail why I recommend one treatment over another. My byword is 'Ice is magic' and using this treatment I often have to explain why I think it is preferable to applying heat which used to be standard treatment for any pain. I always try to explain why I want a student to do things a particular way as I don't believe in the 'don't ask, just do it' method."

Dean Gilden Assigned New Responsibilities

Ralph F. Gilden, dean of admissions and financial aids at EMU since 1965, and more recently interim president and acting vice-president for student affairs for the University, has asked for and received a nine-month appointment involving special responsibilities.

In conjunction with his appointment, Robert L. Garfield, associate dean of admissions, and Lee C. Fawcett, associate dean of financial aids, have been named to handle the day to day responsibilities of University admissions and financial aids.

Previously, Dean Gilden had been on a twelve-month appointment. In a letter to University President James H. Brickley, he indicated he was seeking a nine-month appointment in order to be able to devote the summer months to other interests.

Laurence N. Smith, vice-president for student affairs, commented that he felt "a person such as Ralph Gilden who has served the University for so many years in so many capacities, and who has been as untiring and loyal a contributor to the University, merits this kind of special consideration."

Vice-President Smith explained that Dean Gilden would help in the development of policy formulation within the Division of Student Affairs and would represent the University in communicating changes within the institution to its recruiting areas.

"Essentially," Vice-President Smith said, "he will help with our outreach programs. He will concentrate on improving our relationships in our recruiting areas. We also expect him to help identify groups which might be interested in closer relationships with the University for conferences and related activities, to work on some special Student Affairs funding projects and to work with the Career Planning and Placement Center in bringing the 'new university' to our sending and employing institutions."

"Dean Gilden," Vice-President Smith went on to say, "is a most enthusiastic, articulate and energetic spokesman for the University and will play an important role in expressing our new image."

seen," he said. "I then point out the importance of close observation to writers, artists, crime detection people, lawyers and many others."

Returning to the use of film, Prof. Ross stated, "It gives you the opportunity to bring the whole world into your classroom. You can show Rembrandt's famous painting The Night Watch. You can take your students through Greece and walk with the cameraman through Thailand.

"Film also offers vicarious experiences in many ways. For example, it can portray negative things in life to be avoided. When young drivers look at films of twisted steel and broken bodies, it reveals to them the horror of automobile accidents caused by speed and drugs. It is a vicarious experience that could prevent them from causing the same tragedy."

Prof. Ross noted that "our new president is seeking to identify the uniqueness of this University. He has had wide experience in these arts of communication, having been a public man all of his adult life. I am sure that he and a growing number of other persons on this campus are coming to realize the wisdom of teaching well with the media technology of the last half of the 20th century."

Publications

Gordon Moss, assistant professor of sociology, and Walter Moss, associate professor of history and philosophy, have edited a new book entitled "Growing Old," an exploration of treatment of and resources for the aging, just released by Pocket Books.

Alfred H. Jantz, assistant professor of management, has published an article entitled "The Encouragement of Employee Creativity and Initiative" in the September, 1975, issue of "Personnel Journal."

member. For maximum efficiency, projectors are stored in lockers in classroom buildings on campus. This equipment is regularly checked and maintained by A-V technicians.

A film inspection procedure is carefully followed after each showing to correct any defects and assure that the film will be in the best possible condition for the next showing. A film order clerk, who accepts faculty requests and schedules the showings, is the first link in a chain of A-V service that brings the film into the classroom at the time requested by the instructor. While most films are shown by AV projectionists, film projectors also are circulated to faculty through the equipment control and receptionist clerks in the Audio-Visual Center, 112 University Library. Three previewing rooms are available in the Center.

In addition to his sensitive use of film, Prof. Ross draws upon the whole repertory of visual aids available through the A-V Center. One which he utilizes frequently is the overhead visual.

"When you are discussing shaped poetry or intricate rhyme schemes, it is much easier for the student to see and understand these concepts when you show them on a screen," he commented.

"Similarly, composition is taught effectively if students can view on a screen the examples of writing of their own peers. We can analyze these examples more meaningfully together."

"There is no value in the instructor coming into class with a pack of marked themes, saying some are good and some are atrocious. It is much more efficient to put on the screen some examples, say, of excellent, good and poor paragraph transitions, and let the students decide together the value of each one."

Prof. Ross also uses overhead visuals to enhance the observation skills of his students. "I take a segment of activity, throw it on the screen, black it out and ask students to remember what they've
