A Note on the Format

The articles in this volume of the McNair Chronicles come from a variety of fields in the humanities, arts, and sciences. In the interest of presenting such diversity in an easy-to-navigate journal, the following articles have been edited to conform to a single, consistent house style that differs somewhat from the predominate styles favored in each field. For example, serial commas are used throughout, as are traditional APA-style in-text citations and reference lists. Similarly, the headings and subheadings are based on the new, regularized system of headings introduced in the sixth edition of the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association. While certain cosmetic adjustments have been made, the substance of each article has been left unaltered.
