A Survey In Somalia

From left to right, Haji Mohamed Siraad, Chief of the Kadi Court for all of the former British Somaliland region, Dean R. Stanley Gex, head of Eastern Michigan's College of Education, Haji Noor Abdulla, judge of the Kadi Court, and Mohamed Haji Noor, principal of the Hargeisa Trade School, in front of the government guest house in Hargeisa, northern capitol of the Somalia Republic.

R. Stanley Gex, Dean of the College of Education, and Ronald J. Slay, Professor of Education at Eastern Michigan University, traveled 30 days and 3,000 miles, by plane, by jeep, and by foot, to key cities, towns, and villages of the Republic of Somalia in making an educational survey for the U.S.A.'s International Cooperation Administration and the Somali government. This article discusses their findings.

Under contract with the International Cooperation Administration, two Eastern Michigan University Professors were engaged this summer in an educational survey of the Republic of Somalia. On June 18, Dr. Ronald J. Slay, Professor of Education, and Dr. R. Stanley Gex, Dean of the College of Education, left Ypsilanti, beginning their journey to this east African country. Travelling via Washington, D. C., Paris, Athens, Beirut, Cairo, and Aden, they arrived in the capital city, Mogadiscio, on June 30. They spent 28 days studying conditions in Somalia, and returned via Nairobi, Kenya; Khartoum, Sudan; Cairo, Rome, and Madrid, arriving home on August 8.

The Somali Republic comprises the former British Somaliland and Italian Somalia. The British protectorate was granted independence on June 28, 1960, and two days later merged with the other section when it was granted freedom from its status as a UN protectorate under Italian auspices. It has a coast line of almost 2,000 miles, with a north shore bordering the Gulf of Aden, extending to Cape Guardafui, and thence running southwestward along the Indian Ocean. This country, known as the "Horn of Africa," includes an area slightly larger than the state of Texas, and is, for the most part, semi-arid thornbush country, supporting a nomadic, pastoral economy.

During the winter of 1960-61, officials of Eastern Michigan University conferred with representatives of the International Cooperation Administration (commonly known as ICA), a branch of the State Department, about the possibility of setting up a teacher training institution in Somalia. After these conferences, Eastern was approved by ICA to do a preliminary survey preparatory to developing the institution. Slay and Gex were assigned the task of making the survey. They traveled extensively in the Republic, visiting schools, and conferring with local officials and members of the Ministry of Education. They worked with ICA officials in Somalia, officials of the U.S. Embassy, and representatives of other countries. They spent a week traveling throughout the Northern Province with the English architect from Nairobi, Kenya, who is commissioned to plan the teacher training institute buildings, and studied preliminary plans with him. They made suggestions for modifications which were accepted as desirable changes in the plant. They also had the opportunity to advise relative to furnishings and equipment.

The men found a tremendous potential in human resources in Somalia. The parliamentary government which has been established under a modern constitution is democratic. The people are alert and eager to learn. They are convinced that in order to take their place in the world of nations they must improve their educational system.

Educational improvement must be effected without a wealth of material resources to support the economy. There are no coal or iron deposits in Somalia. Companies are drilling for oil, but as yet they have discovered only a trace. The meager exports consist mainly of bananas, hides and skins, and charcoal. The income from tax resources is not enough to support the government. It appears that for many years foreign aid must be available to supplement the government income. Whether or not the country will eventually be able to become self-sustaining is questionable.

The Republic has two educational systems. The Northern Province has inherited the British system, which consists of a three-year elementary school and a four-year intermediate school. Graduates of the intermediate schools are eligible to enter by examination the secondary school, the teacher training institute, or the trade school. In the area which was the former Italian protectorate, the system comprises a kindergarten and a five-year elementary school, after which the graduate may enter a vocational school or the teacher training institute. In both areas the children attend Koranic school a year or two prior to entering the government supported schools. It is impossible to compile accurate statistics in Somalia, but it is estimated that from 5% to 8% of the elementary aged children are in school. At the present time there are not sufficient government schools to accommodate a greater percentage of children. The Ministry of Education is working with all its resources to increase the number of elementary and intermediate schools. The government schools in existence are starved for supplies and equipment; the libraries in the intermediate schools do not compare with the average library in an American home. There is a great need for books, laboratory equipment, and ordinary school supplies.

There is an unusual language problem in Somalia. The Somali tongue, which is not written, is common throughout the nation. In the Koranic school the youngsters learn Arabic, which is the medium for teaching in the elementary schools. Another language is studied in the elementary schools, English in the north and Italian in the south, and post-elementary schools are taught in one of these languages. It is quite possible that the illiteracy problem will never be satisfactorily solved until the Somali language is written and the common schooling is provided in this tongue. Writing the language is projected, but there is controversy over whether it should be written with the Roman alphabet or the Arabic alphabet.

The Ministry of Education officials and the representatives of ICA in Somalia determined that the most strategic means for improving education in the Republic would be through the establishment of a teacher training institution, partially staffed with American educators, who would also serve as advisors to the Ministry, relative to educational developments. Preliminary plans called for an institution of higher education in the United States to provide four staff members. The new institution would be built by ICA under specifications agreed upon by the Ministry. The plans call for the building to be completed and staffed for the first class by July 1, 1962.

Eastern Michigan University was called upon to make the survey with the idea that they would also enter into a contract with ICA for sending the American portion of the staff to Somalia. Slay and Gex have submitted the written report to Washington, and it is possible that Eastern will be further negotiating for sending the team of educators to Somalia on a two-year contract. Such a contract would be subject to renewal at the end of two years.

During the past few years, the staff and students at Eastern Michigan University have become more and more conscious of responsibilities for international co-operation. Along with the development of the Somali project, there are many indications on the campus of the realization of international responsibility. There are many students enrolled from other lands. These include seven Somali teachers who have been programed by the United States Office of Education to Eastern for a two-year teacher training program. An Education and Africa Seminar was conducted during the summer session, bringing together Michigan teachers with African students in the study of the cultural and educational problems of the emerging continent. The organization of the New Education Fellowship on campus is a group of faculty and students setting up programs to promote better understanding and appreciation of the different cultures of the world. Many of the community organizations and Ypsilanti families have welcomed foreign students to participate in programs and to visit their homes.

Homecoming, 1961

All alumni are cordially invited to the annual Homecoming Weekend, scheduled for Friday, October 20, and Saturday, October 21. Several student organizations will be sponsoring activities for alumni during the Weekend; a schedule of these activities may be obtained at the McKenny information desk or at any residence hall office.

1960 Homecoming Queen

The annual Women's Alumni Physical Education Association Homecoming breakfast will be held on Saturday, October 21, at 8:30 a.m. Reservations, at $1.50 each, should be mailed to Mrs. Betty Simmons, Slauson Junior High School, Ann Arbor, Michigan, before October 19. The Senior Alumni volleyball game for the Women's Physical Education Department has been cancelled.

The parade theme for 1961 is "Advertising Slogans." Following the parade, which begins at 10:00 a.m., a noon Alumni Association Luncheon will be held in dining rooms A, B, C, and D of McKenny Hall. Earl Studt, Director of Alumni Relations, said that invitations to the "dutch treat" luncheon are extended not only to the alumni but to their families and friends as well.

At 1:30, Saturday afternoon, the Hurons will meet Central Michigan University on the gridiron for the Homecoming football game. Post-game activities will include residence hall "cider-sips" and fraternity open-houses. The annual Homecoming dance will be held at 9:00 p.m. in the McKenny Hall ballroom.

Tom Rogers, general chairman of the Homecoming committee, assures us that "The Homecoming committee has worked hard to make this an enjoyable time for both alumni and undergraduates. We feel that Homecoming, 1961 will be a memorable event for all."

NEW STREET NAMES ADOPTED AT EASTERN MICHIGAN

Seventeen streets on the Eastern Michigan University campus have been named or renamed. Signs designating the new street names have been made and placed into use.

According to University officials, the growth of the campus in the past ten years has resulted in a network of streets, many of which were unnamed, others of which were named after a single building, and still others named when they were driveways for single buildings.

Three of the main streets on the campus have been named after Marvin S. Pittman, organizer of the Lincoln Consolidated School, Director of Teacher Training at Eastern from 1929 to 1934, and a pioneer in rural school consolidation; Daniel Putnam, head of the training school from 1871 to 1881, acting principal of Eastern from 1881 to 1883 and from 1885 to 1886, and author of the only history of the University; and Richard C. Ford, professor and head of the Department of Modern Languages from 1903 to 1940.

The street running east and west from Oakwood past the heating plant and Bowen Field House will be called Pittman, the street west of the King-Goodison residence halls running north from Forest Avenue and ending at Pittman will be called Putnam, and the street joining Pittman and Putnam and running down to the Buell-Downing residence hall complex will be called Ford.

Other street names will honor Florus A. Barbour, head of the Department of English from 1885 to 1926; Alma Blount, a member of the Department of English from 1901 to 1936 and author of eight books; Isiah Bowman, 1902 graduate of Eastern, a geography instructor at Eastern from 1903 to 1904, and an assistant professor of geography at Yale University from 1909 to 1915. Bowman was also a member of President Wilson's Peace Commission at Paris, France in 1919, and he was President of Johns Hopkins University from 1935 to 1948.

Also honored are Lewis H. Jones, President of Eastern from 1902 to 1912 and a former superintendent of schools at Indianapolis and Cleveland; Elmer A. Lyman, author, mathematician, and principal of Eastern from 1898 to 1901; Lucy A. Osband, who organized and then headed the Department of Natural Sciences from 1884 to 1893; Carl E. Pray, head of the Department of History from 1913 to 1937; David E. Smith, internationally known student of the history of mathematics and professor of mathematics at Eastern from 1891 to 1898; Fannie C. Burton, head of the women's division of the Department of Physical Education from 1897 to 1922 and Director of Social Activities at Eastern from 1922 to 1935; Charles O. Hoyt, head of the Department of Education from 1900 to 1928; Charles F. Bellows; head of the Department of Mathematics from 1867 to 1890; Alice I. Boardman, supervisor of manual training from 1902 to 1933; David P. Mayhew, principal of Eastern from 1856 to 1871; Genevieve M. Walton, head librarian at Eastern from 1892 to 1932; and Joseph Estabrook, principal of Eastern from 1871 to 1880, Regent of the University of Michigan, and State Superintendent of Public Instruction for four years.
