Spring touches Starkweather Hall

Published in the interests of the Alumni at intervals during the school year by the Division of Field Services, Eastern Michigan University, Ypsilanti, Michigan. PUBLICATION COMMITTEE: Earl K. THE MC KENNY HALL STORY

This fascinating account of how a University building came into existence was written by Egbert Isbell, Professor of History at EMU. It is a portion of an EMU history that Mr. Isbell is planning to publish in book form, and is the first of two articles about McKenny Hall to appear in the Newsletter. The second article, scheduled for a forthcoming issue, will report on the remodeling of McKenny.

The recently publicized action of the State Board of Education approving a two million dollar project for the renovation and enlargement of McKenny Hall reminds one that this building is unique in its relation to the institution of which it is so important a part. For its origin lies not in the educational necessities of classroom and laboratory; or in the administrative necessities of polished desk and draped windows and carpeted floor. The walls of old Pierce Hall had stood the weathering of nearly seventy-five rugged years before the idea of a student union was born on campus. Many thousands of alumni had left its portals to make their way in the world without the benefit of this now integral concept of a university campus. But it was these very alumni who felt the lack, and who — in their loyalty and enthusiasm for their alma mater — supplied it. They could scarcely be expected to realize how widespread the acceptance of this concept was to become throughout the nation; or the ultimate importance of their contribution.

Charles McKenny, EMU
President from 1912-1933

For McKenny Hall is related intimately with Normal's (Eastern's) alumni. Of all the benefits that have accrued to our University from her organized alumni, and there are many, McKenny Hall stands as the grand project, the lasting contribution to the concept of higher education on our campus. Lacking the Alumni Association, there would have been no McKenny Hall.

The story of the project began in 1924, when President McKenny, in the course of a meeting with student leaders in his office to discuss "social matters", suggested the possibility of a building to serve as the social center for the campus. As reported later, the idea fell "like a spark in dry grass and flashed up into a flame of enthusiasm." At about the same time, McKenny presented the idea to the executive committee of the Alumni Association, and suggested that the Association take the initiative. As he described it, the building would be ... a general social center for student life... a home for alumni returning to the college, serving a purpose similar to that of the Michigan Union at the University of Michigan.

The University of Michigan Union had been completed just five years earlier, and, while not the first instance of a clubhouse to serve student social life, it was the pioneer in the broader concept to serve all the men of the university—"graduates, faculty and regents." A statement of the purpose of the University of Michigan building ran as follows:

Its avowed objects are to promote University spirit, and to increase social intercourse and acquaintance with each other's work among the members of the different departments and other University organizations.

It will be noted, however, that President McKenny's concept was broader than that at Ann Arbor, which included only men (symbolized for many, many years by the taboo that women could enter and leave the building only by the side entrance). A more formal statement, made shortly after, of the Ypsilanti concept reveals its true scope:

The purpose of such a building is to provide a campus headquarters for students, faculty, alumni, and friends. Under present conditions, men and women lack a common meeting ground, returning alumni have no central place to use as headquarters, and the campus lacks a proper place to receive and entertain visitors. The Union building will fill this long-felt want.

The idea met with widespread enthusiasm. The local alumni club at Flint responded immediately by turning over to the parent Alumni Association the balance of funds in their treasury. In the following year, the members of the faculty pledged $10,000; the Student Council secured pledges amounting to $55,000.

But, as a vast human experience will attest, good ideas are relatively easy to come by; the difficult part lies in their implementation. The goal was a building that would cost $500,000. Alas, it was soon discovered by the Alumni campaign committee that pledges are not cash. And of course it could not be foreseen in 1924 that within a very few years the nation would be faced with the worst and longest and most destructive economic depression in all history. Indeed, it was not anticipated that the drive for funds would last more than two or three years at most. The building would be presented to the College by the Alumni Association at the celebration of the diamond jubilee—the seventy-fifth anniversary of the opening of Normal's doors, which would take place at the Mid-Winter Conference in January 1928.

So the campaign was bravely undertaken. In 1926, a contract was signed with a professional fund-raising concern (Tamblyn and Brown of New York City); an architect, Frank Eurich, Jr., was employed (firm of Burroughs and Eurich, of Detroit). In April, 1927, a full-scale alumni drive was launched with a big dinner in Detroit at the Masonic Temple. Some twelve hundred enthusiastic alumni attended. Governor Green, an alumnus of '93, was the main speaker. An honorary campaign committee, headed by Frank Cody, a student at Normal in 1890, now superintendent of the Detroit public schools, was created. Other banquets were held in various parts of the State. Pledges came streaming in. The Alumni Association set up the office of Field Secretary, appointed Edwin Stahl, '27, to fill it, and appointed Lucille Marshall (Mrs. George Marshall) as book-keeper. By January 1928, it was announced that $350,000 had been raised, and an architect's drawing of a very impressive building was shown. The appointment of Mr. Stahl proved to be most fortunate. Dynamic and persistent, he became the symbol of the loyal alumnus at his best.

Finishing the excavation

But there was no presentation at the diamond jubilee. Instead, a quiet meeting was called, of some eighteen alumni district representatives, to promote a program of organizing an alumni club wherever twenty-five or more alumni were resident in an area. A finance committee for the Ypsilanti area was created, headed by Daniel L. Quirk, Jr., not an alumnus but a loyal supporter of the College. Earl Laing, '19, headed a similar committee in Detroit. A discount of five percent was offered to all who would pay their pledges in full. The excellent record of the students in honoring their commitments was held up as a shining example. A proposal to ask the State Legislature for an appropriation of $160,000 was considered and dropped. The State Board of Education, which had agreed to provide the site, prescribed that construction of the building should not begin until $175,000 in cash was in hand. This was lowered to $150,000. A bond issue was proposed—at first for $150,000. It was concluded with the Detroit and Security Trust Co. for $190,000, at six percent interest.

By mid-year of 1930, collections from pledges amounted to $133,000. This, together with the proceeds of the bond issue, enabled the Alumni Association to proceed. The bid of contractors Lovering and Longbotrom was accepted; the site, described as

Finishing the construction

Architects' original conception of McKenny Hall

"the field west of the Elementary Training School" (now Welch Hall) was determined, and on November 8, 1930, the ground-breaking ceremony took place. Some two thousand students, alumni, and townspeople were present. The State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Webster Pearce, '01, spoke, along with President McKenny, the president of the Alumni Association (Norman Arthur, '10), and the Mayor of Ypsilanti ("Mat" Max), who presented the keys of the city to Mr. Arthur. The cornerstone of the new building was laid January 17, 1931, and the building opened its doors the following September 14.

At the formal dedication, held in the beautiful ballroom (to be named in 1937 after alumnus Fred W. Green, '93, then ex-Governor of Michigan) on Saturday morning, October 24, Webster Pearce again spoke—this time dedicating the building

In honor of the constructive work of the men and women who dreamed, conceived, and designed this building, in honor of the life-bestowing work of the men and women who will have their lives broadened and deepened and enriched by this building, and in honor of the work that is to be done by the hands and heads and hearts of all who receive life-giving inspiration from associations made possible by this building.

The building had been reduced from the $500,000 structure originally planned to one of $300,000. But its essential features were retained, and its design of "College Gothic" was a contribution to the attractiveness of the campus. However, the problem of financing hung like a menacing cloud on the horizon. In 1932, the bondholders were asked to waive their sinking fund rights for two years, so that obligations arising from the purchase of equipment could be met. A year later, short-term notes were issued to pay interest on the bonds. The problem was finally resolved in mid-1937 by a refinancing operation, facilitated through the Ann Arbor Trust Co., in which the State Board of Education took over the building, issuing in payment twenty-year certificates of indebtedness at four percent interest. These certificates would be funded by a student membership fee of not less than ten dollars per year, plus profits from the operation of the building. The self-liquidating idea, which has in all the years since contributed so vitally to the physical expansion of the campus, had arrived at Normal.

The grand project had occupied the minds and hearts of many—alumni, students, faculty, and friends—over a period of more than a dozen years. Upwards of ten thousand people had made financial contribution. The Great Depression had not stopped it. It represented dramatically those admirable qualities of imagination, loyalty, of dogged determination in the face of formidable obstacles—and enthusiastic loyalty to an alma mater. While not the first of its kind on a teachers' college campus, it was one of the first—and thus drew widespread attention and emulation.

As in all undertakings that are successful, a few names stand out. Just two will be mentioned here. President McKenny was given unhesitating credit for initiating the plan, and the building was named after him as A tribute to the man who has served the College as president for nineteen years... at the request of many prominent alumni and supporters of the project... prompted by the fact that it was President McKenny who took the first steps toward stimulating active student, alumni interest in the project.

The other name is that of Clarence E. Gittins, Detroit lawyer (a Normal student in 1901). In a tribute to him upon his death in 1935, the Alumni Board said:

... it was largely through the efforts of Mr. Gittins that it was possible to promote a program of enlarged service and carry it to a successful completion. Much of the success in financing Charles McKenny Hall and putting it on a working basis was due to the wisdom of his counsel and to the personal service which he gave freely and generously.

As federal District Judge Arthur F. Lederle, '09, said at the annual luncheon of the Alumni Association some years later:

McKenny Hall is more than the product of an architect's measure and slide rule. It is a building into which somebody's heart has gone... It represents the unselfish effort and devotion of alumni and faculty groups that have wished to honor the College they represent.

Eastern's Building Program

Eastern Michigan University again has a long-range building program underway. It is expected that construction of new buildings and rehabilitation of the older buildings will keep up with or at least not fall too far behind enrollment increases, according to James E. Green, Vice President and Director of Planning and Development.

Construction started in January on the Margaret E. Wise Residence Hall, the third unit of the new residence hall complex. Financing for this project comes from revenue bonds. Construction started on the new Joseph E. Warner Physical Education Building the first week in April. Plans have been completed for the J. M. B. Sill Hall, which will house the fine art and the industrial education departments, and the Governor's budget recommendation for next year provides for a construction start early in 1964. Included in this project is a large lecture hall wing which will give the University badly needed large-size lecture halls. Financing for the physical education building and the arts building will come from state-appropriated funds.

Approved by the State Board of Education, with legislative approval pending, is a $2,000,000 remodeling and addition for Charles McKenny Hall, the union building. Construction is expected to start early in the spring of 1964. Detailed program planning is now underway. The project will double the space for the union building and will provide enlarged social and recreational facilities, an enlarged bookstore, and enlarged and improved facilities for student activities, student organizations, and student publications. Included also are enlarged and improved food facilities. Financing for this project, subject to legislative approval, will come from funds borrowed against student activities fees.

The old gymnasium is scheduled for demolition after the occupation of the new physical education building in the summer of 1964.

In the immediate future, a very large addition and remodeling of the University library is scheduled with a tentative completion date some time during the academic year of 1967-68.

The remodeling and rehabilitation of R. Clyde Ford Hall (the old arts building) is also scheduled as soon as the departments presently occupying the building move into Sill Hall. Space in Ford Hall will be occupied by the Department of Business Studies and certain administrative offices, with some general classroom space for the whole University.

Facilities scheduled for the near future include a classroom wing on Strong Physical Science Building and a new teacher education building. Residence halls will be constructed as enrollments increase, with construction on the fourth unit of the complex likely to start in the summer of 1964, Green said.

Elton J. Rynearson To Retire

Elton J. Rynearson, who has been on the faculty at Eastern Michigan University since 1925, will retire with emeritus status on July 1, 1963.

Rynearson graduated from Normal High School in Ypsilanti, and in 1914 graduated from Michigan State Normal College with a Life Certificate. Professional baseball activity resulted in his being drafted by the Detroit Tigers in 1915.

Following army service as a lieutenant, Rynearson earned a B.S. degree from the Normal College and spent three years in the medical and graduate school at the University of Michigan. In 1925, he came to the Normal College as director of field athletics, head coach in football, basketball and baseball, and teacher of anatomy and physiology.

Resigning from coaching duties in 1948 and as director of athletics in 1958, Rynearson has devoted his time to teaching anatomy, kinesiology, and physiology.

In 1934, the fifth edition of Wilbur P. Bowen's Applied Anatomy and Kinesiology was revised by Rynearson and Miss Ruth Boughner, emeritus professor from EMU.

Information Regarding Loan

and Scholarship Funds

Faculty, alumni, and friends of EMU who wish to contribute to existing loan and scholarship funds (including Extra-curricular Activities Scholarship) or to establish a scholarship or loan fund as a memorial to former teachers, students, friends, public servants, or organizations should get in touch with Ralph Gilden, Dean of Admissions and Student Activities, Eastern Michigan University, Ypsilanti, Michigan.

Arthur D. Walker To Retire

A coaching career which has spanned 42 years will come to an end in June when Arthur D. Walker retires. Walker has been coach at Roosevelt School, laboratory school operated by Eastern Michigan University, since 1927. Prior to coming to Roosevelt, he taught a total of six years at four other high schools.

After graduating from Cass City High School and Cleary College, Walker earned a Life Certificate from Eastern in 1921 and a B.S. degree in 1926. He was track captain in 1921 and held the college pole vault and high jump records. In 1936 he received an M.A. degree from the University of Michigan.

Over his long career, Walker has coached 41 football teams, 38 basketball, 42 baseball and track teams, was 39 years an athletic director, and for 37 years has been a supervisor of student teachers.

Seventy-Fifth Anniversary Celebrants

Two Eastern Michigan University graduates of the class of 1888, Emma Ackermann and Rolfe S. Patrick, were recently invited to celebrate their seventy-fifth anniversaries at EMU on this year's Alumni Day.

Emma Ackermann, born in October, 1867, in Wenona, Michigan, completed her high school education in Bay City in 1885. After graduating from Michigan State Normal College in 1888, she taught in the Charlotte High School for ten years, and then returned to Ypsilanti to teach in the Normal College. In 1900, she received a B. Ph. degree from the University of Michigan. She taught mathematics in the high school at Bay City from 1900 to 1911, and then went to Lockport, Illinois, where she taught in the high school there until 1932. In 1932, she retired, and, after a winter in Florida, settled in Chula Vista, California, at Fredericka Manor, where she has been since 1934. Mrs. Helen Zimmerman, Director of Members Services at Fredericka Manor, reports that Miss Ackermann receives mail from many of her pupils from all over the country, and seems to have been a much beloved teacher.

Rolfe S. Patrick, born October 20, 1870, in Jefferson Township, Michigan, completed his early education in Cassopolis in 1886. After his graduation from Michigan Normal in 1888, he taught for three years, worked in a drug store for six years, and then moved to Des Moines, Iowa, where he has worked and lived ever since; he worked in the wholesale hardware business for 53 years. Mr. Patrick was married in 1900 and has one son and two grandsons. He reports that he is well, living alone, and is fortunate in having good neighbors.

The Alumni Association of EMU salutes Miss Ackermann and Mr. Patrick on their many achievements and especially on the occasion of their seventy-fifth anniversaries as loyal alumni of EMU.
