Thomas Tyra, director of bands, reports that about $2,800 in donations and pledges was received from the band marathon. The University Band played to a world-record of 50 consecutive hours, beating the old record of 48 hours. As of press time, Dr. Tyra said he still expected some pledges to trail in. Donations are still being accepted.

The Department of Political Science is sponsoring the third bicentennial seminar on American public service on Wednesday from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the Tower Room of McKenny Union. The session, titled "Affirmative Action and the Merit System," will include discussions on "Problems and Prospects" and "Recruitment, Promotion and American Minorities." Participating will be Ronald A. Martens, area manager of the U.S. Civil Service Commission; Ernest Wallick, director of the Bureau of Selection, Michigan Department of Civil Service; George Kolk, assistant to the city manager of Jackson, and Dave Williams, city manager of Inkster. Friday is the deadline for honorary degree candidate nominations and vita to be submitted for the April 1976 commencement. They must be submitted to the Office of University Relations, 141 Pierce Hall, where the official forms are available. To extend consideration, a nomination must be re-submitted every two years.

The Intramurals Office reports that efforts are now under way to recruit faculty, staff and their spouses for an IM volleyball league. The league would meet Wednesdays to play from 6 to 10 p.m. To sign up or obtain further information, call the IM office at 487-1338, or visit the office at 216 Warner.

The University community is invited to the EMU ROTC Brigade's Military Ball, which will be Saturday, March 6, in the McKenny Union Ballroom. Cocktail hour (cash bar) is from 7 to 8 p.m.; dinner 8 to 9 p.m., and dancing from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Tickets, priced at $15 per couple, are available at the Military Science Department, Roosevelt Hall, 487-1020.

State Representative Gary Owen will speak on "Financing Higher Education in Michigan" at the Feb. 16 meeting of the EMU Economics Club. He will speak at noon in the Stratford Room of McKenny Union. Open to the public.

Comprehensive Accreditation Visit Scheduled This Week

By Kathy Tinney

Various programs at Eastern Michigan University are accredited by a number of different agencies, but the most important agency is the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools (NCA), which accredits all of the University's programs.

The NCA will be visiting campus this week from Tuesday through Friday. Vice-President for Academic Affairs James S. Magee says this is the most important visit of this kind that the University goes through. "Other agencies deal with specific programs. This is the big one," he explains.

Education Professor Quirico S. Samonte, coordinator of the accreditation visit, has spent the past year and a half on released time preparing for the visit.

Materials to be reviewed by the evaluating team, which were prepared and compiled by Prof. Samonte, include a three-volume analysis of the mission, governance and resources of the University; a four-volume report on faculty vitae; and a variety of other documents, such as the current budget, an audit of 1974-75, institutional bylaws, minutes of all faculty meetings for the last year, reports of major units of the University to the president and the president's annual reports for the last three years.

Prof. Samonte says his preparation was guided by the concept that this be a University-wide project. He felt that "all units should be involved in the preparation of data, in understanding what the evaluation is about and in having responsibility for responding to the evaluators."

Quirico S. Samonte

"I met with each academic department individually to explain our history with the NCA and the data required. Then I developed outlines for the materials required, edited the materials prepared by departments and filled in gaps in the materials where necessary."

He explains that the organization of his report is based on identifying positive points as well as concerns. "This is not just a public relations piece or a snow job because if it were we would lose credibility. I made an attempt to be as objective as possible."

The last comprehensive NCA accrediting visit was in 1964. At that time, says Dr. Magee, the University was just converting from a teacher's college to a multi-disciplined institution. "Since then, we have experienced rapid growth, mushrooming programs and, after a period of decline in the early '70's, we are now at a point of consolidation and reassessment," he notes.

In the introduction to the Self-Study Report, Prof. Samonte notes that "(1) The increase in on-campus enrollment from 7,199 in 1963-1964 to 18,397 in 1973-1974 has broadened the range of interests within the student population now served by (the University); (2) Graduate students represent about 23 percent of the total enrollment (7,569 students in 1974 compared to 1,279 students in 1969) and provide a base and feeder for more advanced degrees not now offered by the university; (3) The level of academic preparation of the full-time faculty has improved from 43 percent with the doctorate in 1963-1964 to 61 percent in 1973-1974."

Other data in the report include the faculty-student ratio at EMU (one to twenty-three in the fall of 1964 and one to twenty-two in the fall of 1974) and the mean and median salaries of full-time faculty of the Central State Colleges and Universities (in 1964-1965, Eastern ranked 21st of 38 with a mean salary of $8,226 and a median salary of $8,100; in 1974-1975, Eastern ranked 2nd of 30 with a mean salary of $15,886 and a median salary of $15,152).

In addition to examining the documents and data prepared by Prof. Samonte, the evaluating team will meet with President Brickley and members of the Board of Regents and attend some evening classes. The guidelines of this kind of on-site visit also require that the evaluators get a good sample of respondents from among faculty and students. Faculty members may schedule appointments with evaluators Thursday, Feb. 19, between 3 and 4:30 p.m. in the Huron Room of McKenny Union. Students may arrange appointments with the evaluators on Thursday, Feb. 19, between 4:30 and 6 p.m., also in the Huron Room. To schedule an appointment, call Mrs. Kristin Romelhardt, Graduate School Office, at 487-0045.

Dr. Magee says that the evaluators will be interested in faculty and student morale, whether faculty members feel satisfied with their professional role at EMU and whether students feel they are receiving appropriate, meaningful instruction.

"We hope students and faculty members will be candid with the evaluating team," he says. "We have no secrets and it is best to be open and not to hide anything."

In addition to the comprehensive evaluation of the University's mission, programs, resources, governance and follow-up of graduates, final accreditation will be sought for four graduate programs, and preliminary accreditation will be sought for the Doctor of Arts.

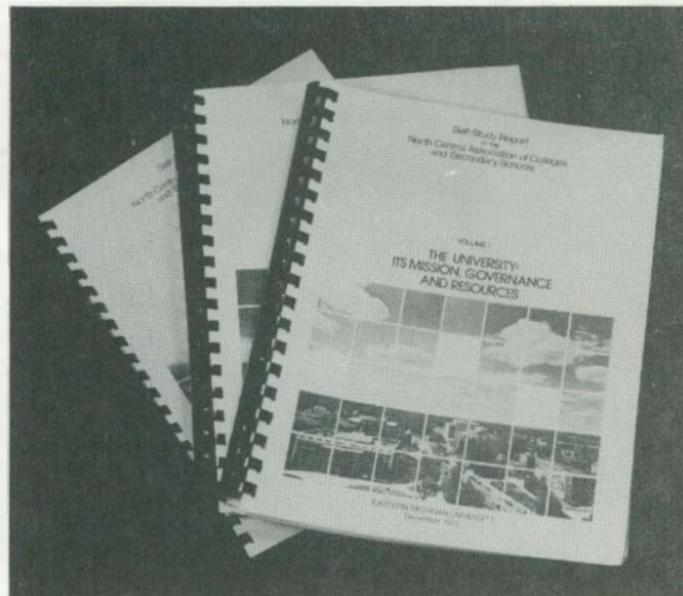

"Accreditation comes in two stages," explains Prof. Samonte. "A program receiving preliminary accreditation is given approval by the accrediting agency subject to review. A program receiving final accreditation is given full approval."

The four degree programs seeking final accreditation include the Master of Business Administration degree, the Specialist in Arts in guidance and counseling, the Specialist in Arts in school psychology and the Specialist in Arts in Special Education. All received preliminary accreditation about five years ago, says Prof. Samonte.

Final results of the accreditation visit should be completed by sometime next summer, although preliminary comments will be made to President Brickley, the Executive Council and academic deans at the exit interview on Friday. Members of the evaluating team include Dr. Rudolph W. Schulz, chairperson, professor of psychology, University of Iowa; Dr. Richard W. Burkhardt, vice-president for instructional affairs and dean of faculties, Ball State University; Dr. Robert Dolphin, Jr., associate dean, School of Graduate Studies, Wright State University; Dr. Lee S. Dreyfus, chancellor, University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point; Dr. Paige E. Mulhollan, dean, College of Arts and Sciences, University of Oklahoma; Dr. Mary E. Gaither, professor of English, Indiana University; Dr. Wayne J. McIlrath, professor of biological sciences, Northern Illinois University; Dr. Frank H. Wood, professor and coordinator, special education programs, University of Minnesota; and Dr. Donald Adams, vice-president, Student Life, Drake University.

Dr. Magee says that members of the team usually are selected from similar institutions with specialists in the areas under particular review.

Both Dr. Magee and Prof. Samonte consider the accreditation visit an important project. "It evaluates the objectives, resources and governance of the University," says Prof. Samonte, "and in so doing, it gives us a chance to review the total operation of the University. It gives us a chance also to meet with experienced and qualified people from the outside who are able to look at our institution more objectively and the members of the accrediting team can serve as a resource for us. The accrediting process is two way - evaluate and give suggestions, criticize as well as point out the strong points. In the long run, it forces us to upgrade our operation and clarify our objectives."

Prof. Samonte compiled a three-volume analysis of the mission, governance and resources of the University in preparation for the visit of the North Central Association evaluation team this week.

Ray Faulkner Choreographs Bicentennial Program

By Jeanne B. Jordan

"Of course I always wanted to dance — and did dance — but because I couldn't see a career in such a desire, I earned my first degree in psychology."

T. Ray Faulkner is an assistant professor in the EMU Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation who recently was awarded a grant to choreograph a special touring dance program titled "Dance in America: 1776-1976."

She continued reminiscing about her beginnings as a dancer: "While I taught outdoor education in the Hawthorne and Bellflower schools in California, I still rushed to the city every chance I got to continue dancing. Then I reached a point where I had to teach in a classroom if I wanted to continue the outdoor teaching, so since I was in town all the time, and dancing constantly, I decided that my master's degree would be with a dance major. This was followed by a Ph.D. in dance and related arts, both from Texas Woman's University."

"The grant," Dr. Faulkner said, "was given to us by the Michigan Council of the Arts to serve two purposes. One was to give our students the broad experience of taking a dance concert touring program to public schools in the state of Michigan, and the other was to expose the public to what dance is all about. So many people have no idea what we mean when we talk about dance and our bicentennial program is an ideal way to enlighten them."

Dr. Faulkner was the recipient of the grant which grew out of a request put to her by the president of the Mid-West Association for Health, Physical Education and Recreation to do a dance program for the district convention last year. Following the convention appearance, the EMU dancers performed in the Wayne-Westland schools and the decision was then made to apply for a grant in order to work out a more extensive program with wider touring possibilities.

Linda Hemmelgarn, who is co-director of the bicentennial tour, previously had choreographed "Area Code 615" and this was used as the opening for the American dance program. The title is the telephone area code for Nashville, Tenn., which gives the clue to its style. It is the American pioneer statement with a one-word description of "hoedown." Earlier dances in this country were imported, with ethnic dances from every country of Europe forming the foundation of our dancing. The reels performed here are almost pure imports and traditional classical ballet is another imported discipline.

"Following the Nashville portion of our program comes another pure American invention — the Charleston of the 1920s. Another American addition to the world of dance is our tap dancing, influenced perhaps by Irish jigs and Black folk dancing, but so blended as to be uniquely American.

"Our tour program then goes to World War II boogie-woogie, another purely American native dance which swept the world. We then show another branch of dance — that of modern dance. We do one traditional dance, then a very modern abstract form which concentrates on movements and colors. In this particular dance, two of the performers are dehumanized by being completely enclosed in large bags which move in counterpoint to the other dancers. The program closes at the point where we are right now — with a rock-jazz number."

Schools in Wayne, Washtenaw and Monroe counties have scheduled performances for the program which is timed to be presented in a 40-minute assembly period. This includes a short narration given by Dr. Faulkner while the dancers do a quick change of costume.

Another project which she organized and is urgently recommending is a two-week course for EMU students in dance and movement at the Laban Art of Movement Centre in Roehampton College just west of London, England. The Centre, in association with the University of London's Goldsmith College, is Great Britain's parent school for teacher preparation in dance.

In 1974, Dr. Faulkner enrolled in a three-month term at the Laban Centre, and the following summer took a two-week course in Edinburgh, also given by the Laban school. She feels that this kind of instruction is invaluable for American dance teachers as the two countries have totally different approaches to the subject.

"Our students who take this course will get an ideal blend of ours and theirs. Here we are technicians first and foremost. It's like when you learned to play the piano. You were taught to practice scales, fingering, rhythm and so on, but, no one ever suggested that you create your own music. It is the same precisely in dance — we insist on technique and much practice, while in England their approach is creative. They don't have the technical skill that we have, but from the beginning they are encouraged to create what they wish.

"As a result of this divergence, we do have more technicians in the idiom of modern dance than any other country."

Bringing her activities really up to date, Dr. Faulkner mentioned that this past weekend (Feb. 13 and 14) a dance was performed at Iowa State University in Ames, which she choreographed in 1971 for a national convention of the American Alliance for Health, Physical Education and Recreation. Following the convention, she was invited to be a guest choreographer in Iowa and is honored that the performance in Ames was the fifth public presentation of it. Another performance was earlier in Bloomington, Ind.

"This particular dance is responsible for my owning 12 umbrellas and for the same number to be owned by EMU, by Indiana University, and now by Iowa State. The dance, 'A Bigger Movement Happening,' is built on props and in this case each dancer has an umbrella which leads to all the action — the umbrellas become in turn bagpipes, fishing poles, candles, boat oars and much more and all the movement flows from one action to another."

After coming to Eastern in 1970, Dr. Faulkner was given a leave of absence the next fall to serve as chairperson of the Department of Dance at the University of the Americas, Cholula, Puebla, Mexico. While in Mexico she took an eight-week summer course at the Theatre of the Ballet Folklorico in Mexico City.

"Anyone who is interested in our Bicentennial Tour and hasn't had a chance to see it, should plan to attend the 'EMU Dancers in Concert' on the Quirk stage Feb. 19-21. That concert will open with 'Area Code 615' and will include 'Bags,' both from the tour program."

EMU Dancers to Present Concert

The EMU Dancers will present their annual concert from Thursday through Saturday, Feb. 19-21, in Quirk Auditorium. Performances will be given at 8 each evening and a matinee will be presented at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Thirty-five students and two faculty members will participate in works choreographed by both students and faculty. Highlight of the concert will be dances from a touring program celebrating the bicentennial which was developed by EMU dancers with the aid of a grant from the Michigan Council of the Arts.

Included in the bicentennial excerpt will be "Area Code 615,"

Periodical articles are an important, but often elusive teaching and research tool. A "periodical" is a serial publication, usually issued at regular intervals, such as weekly, monthly or quarterly. In the past several years most libraries have experienced a trend toward increased use of periodicals.

Eastern Michigan University's current computerized "List of Journal Holdings" includes about 4,500 current subscriptions and another 1,000 entries for periodicals to which we no longer

SPECIAL PROJECTS AND RESEARCH DEVELOPMENT

The following opportunities for program development currently are available:

NSF Solicits Research Applications Under Foreign Currency Program

The National Science Foundation (NSF) is soliciting applications for research, science education and related activities to be conducted under the NSF Special Foreign Currency Program in three countries: Egypt, India and Pakistan—countries that still have an excess of U.S. owned foreign currencies that originated under the PL 480 agreement on U.S. foreign aid. Activities supported under the program include joint or complementary projects of U.S. and foreign scientists, projects conducted at foreign sites mainly by foreign scientists, and projects conducted abroad by U.S. institutions. There is also support for international travel for project development and meetings involving U.S. scientists, and visits by individual U.S. scientists to institutions in participating countries.

NSF Research on Social Effects of Broadcast TV

NSF is soliciting proposals for policy-related research on social effects of broadcast TV under deadline date of March 29, 1976. NSF is seeking original studies of new behavior concerning television use and effects of use; studies which summarize, integrate and interpret previous research so as to make it useful to policy makers, industry and the public.

National Institute of Education (NIE)

The House Education and Labor Committee approved a bill Jan. 28, 1976, extending the authorization for the National Institute of Education for two more years and spelling out priority areas for its research. These areas are: improving student achievement, school finances, equal educational opportunities, preparation for careers and dissemination of research results. The Bill (HR 5988) also allows NIE to award research fellowships. The amount authorized in the past year for NIE was $70 million. President Ford proposes spending $90 million for the National Institute of Education this year.

subscribe. While the Central Serial Record in Room 205 of the Center of Educational Resources has the complete record for periodical holdings, the "List of Journal Holdings" is the source that is most frequently consulted by students and faculty for periodical information. This gives, in separate sections, an alphabetical listing of journals, an alphabetical listing of periodical indexes and abstracts, an alphabetical list of newspapers and a subject index to the journals.

Information for each journal title includes the beginning and ending dates of our holdings, frequency of publication, location in our collections and format (paper or microform). The "Journal Holdings" is the record to consult if one wants to know what titles we have and what volumes of a particular title are available.

Periodicals in the Center of Educational Resources are shelved alphabetically by title in our four broad subject Divisions. Bound volumes and current unbound issues are kept together on the open shelves.

Unlike monographic materials, access to individual articles in periodicals is found chiefly through indexes and/or abstracts, not through the card catalogs. The "Journal Holdings" does provide a subject index to periodical titles, but not to the individual articles in the periodicals. The more than 200 periodical indexes and abstracts grouped together in the "List of Journal Holdings" can be used to locate periodical articles by author, title or subject. These include general indexes, such as the "Readers Guide to Periodical Literature" and "The Public Affairs Information Services Bulletin" (PAIS), and special indexes, such as "Business Periodical Index," "Education Index" and "Cumulative Index to Nursing Literature."

With increasing frequency, more periodical titles are received in microform. In many cases it has been shown that it is more expedient to acquire microform copies of titles that we wish to keep than to bind paper copies. This is also true for filling in gaps in backruns. Periodicals on microform are kept in the Microform Reading Rooms associated with each of the broad subject divisions. Readers for these microfilm and microfiche copies also are available in these divisional Microform Reading Rooms.

Fortunately, Eastern's students and faculty are not limited by the number of periodicals in our own holdings. We have arrangements for obtaining copies of articles through the State Access Office at the University of Michigan, the Michigan State Library in Lansing and the Center for Research Library in Chicago.

Bicentennial Notes

FOCUS ON staff:

John Garland Is Eastern's 'Kojak'

Det. Sgt. John Garland

By Brad Simmons

John Garland doesn't wear a crumpled raincoat like Colombo and he doesn't have a pet cockatoo like Baretta.

Some people do, however, call him Kojak.

"And some people call me a lot nastier names than Kojak," says Sgt. Garland, a detective in Eastern Michigan University's Safety Department.

If anybody calls the soft-spoken EMU detective nasty names, it's probably the criminal element, since he has an excellent record of solved cases. Of the 27 armed robberies that have occurred on campus in the past three years, all but two or three have been solved, he says. And of the hundreds of cases that Sgt. Garland has presented for prosecution, only one has been denied.

Sgt. Garland, now chief of EMU's three-man Detective Division, came to the University 13 years ago as a patrolman. After completion of an intensive criminal investigation course at Michigan State University in 1967, he was promoted to detective sergeant and was assigned full-time to the John Collins case.

Shortly after the Karen Sue Beine-man murder, Sgt. Garland was doing most of the background work on campus. In an attempt to apprehend the killer, he sat at the scene of the crime with a mannequin, hoping Collins would return. Once in custody, Sgt. Garland spent the night with Collins in jail to prevent him from committing suicide.

Collins, a former EMU student, was convicted of murdering Ms. Beineman and is now serving a life sentence.

The most exciting thing that happened during his career, he says, was when he was in an Ypsilanti bank when it was robbed.

"A bank employee said to me 'Sgt. Garland, we're being robbed,'" he remembers. "I thought it would only happen on TV..."

"I pursued the bank robber and he shot at me. I couldn't return the fire because I couldn't take a chance on hitting an innocent person."

Although the robbery suspect eluded capture at the holdup scene, he was apprehended soon thereafter in Chicago by FBI agents who took him after a 45-minute shoot out.

Sgt. Garland does not claim to be a fearless cop. "I think all of us are afraid in those types of situations," he says. "You have to be able to face that fear."

The most common crimes on the EMU campus, he notes, are larcenies, particularly from automobiles. In extremely cold weather, car batteries often are stolen. In other times, tape decks, tires and wheels often are targets of thefts.

"The University is no longer a sanction from crime like it was in the early sixties," the detective sergeant says. "I worked here five years before I ever made an arrest - it was for a minor in possession (of alcohol)."

But, he says, the economy has been a major factor in increasing the crime problem. Even so, Sgt. Garland points out that Eastern has a lower crime rate than other universities of the same size, and adds that EMU loses very little University property.

"The security of our buildings is a lot better," he says, "because we have an alarm system here and students are checking the buildings at night."

Sgt. Garland says that his main concern is the welfare of the EMU student - making sure he or she is not subjected to what he calls "devious behavior."

Sgt. Garland says he puts his investigative priorities on "crimes against persons." At the time of this interview, he had just issued four warrants in the Jan. 17 armed robbery case in which a Putnam Hall resident adviser was robbed of his stereo, clothing and a dollar.

"It's putting two and two together to come up with four," he explains. "This is where your investigative skills come in as far as interviewing is concerned."

"In the interview, it's a matter of getting what you want to hear without violating the individual's constitutional rights. You then connect the physical evidence."

Before the interview, he says, the individual must be advised of his or her constitutional rights - rights which Sgt. Garland has memorized. During the interview, the police officer cannot make any promises.

"Basically I feel that there is no such thing as a bad experience as long as a lesson is learned," he says.

Although Sgt. Garland says he often works long hours as an investigator, the majority of his time is spent trying to prevent crimes.

"The majority of my time is spent in trying to deter people from getting into crime here..." he says. "Here at the University, we try to deter people from things that can be detrimental to them later in life."

Sgt. Garland says he does much of his deterring by talking to the numerous students he knows personally - students who have come to him for assistance in seeking jobs, help with boyfriend or girlfriend conflicts or advice for a recipient of a failing grade.

A native of Three Rivers, Mich., the EMU detective studied sociology and history at Western Michigan University before going into the Air Force, serving for six years. He worked as a counselor of emotionally disturbed children at the University of Michigan's Children's Psychiatric Hospital shortly after his discharge.

He notes that some 70 percent of Eastern's police officers have college degrees.

"A University policeman has to be more versatile than one who works for a municipality," he says. "You're dealing with more educated people, and you have to communicate with people on their level."

Sgt. Garland says he watches all of the cop shows on television, and figures them out way ahead of his TV counterparts. The TV shows leave out much of the time-consuming, less glamorous tasks a detective has to attend to.

Fingerprints, he notes, take two weeks to process through the state crime lab.

FACULTY ASSEMBLY ROUNDUP

Counseling Dean to Resign in June

EMU Counseling Dean Peter T. Hountras announced his resignation Thursday, Feb. 5. It is effective June 30.

Dr. Hountras, 48, who has been dean of the EMU Counseling Center since 1970, plans to return to teaching and to pursue a private practice in psychology. He also expects to serve as a consultant to state and federal agencies as well as to business and industry.

Dr. Hountras indicated he had been considering the change for some time because he wanted to withdraw from full-time administration.

"These have been highly rewarding years for me and I treasure them," he said. "They have meant a great deal to me personally and professionally. I have spent the past 30 years in higher education and have found administration to be both rewarding and punishing.

"I do look forward to serving higher education in the future in other capacities. I look forward to tomorrow with anticipation but backward with gratitude. It's been exciting."

During Dr. Hountras' leadership of the Counseling Center several very innovative counseling approaches were introduced.

Recently, Dr. Hountras has been responsible for developing a comprehensive study of the problems of physically exceptional students. It is expected his report will provide the basis for policy and program development.

Vice-President for Student Affairs Laurence N. Smith said the University was sorry to lose such a capable individual.

"We wish Dr. Hountras the very best in his future personal and professional endeavors," Smith commented.
