THE GROWTH OF THE UNIVERSITY PART I

The first of three articles on the over-all growth of the University, particularly over the last ten years, this article will describe recent evidences of growth at Eastern Michigan University from the standpoint of instruction. Because of limitations of time and space, this article obviously can not deal with every evidence of growth that could be cited but must be general and rather selective in its examples. Two future articles will discuss, respectively, the growth of the physical plant and facilities of the University, and increases in the quantity and quality of student services at Eastern over the last ten years.

In 1953, Eastern Michigan University was still called Michigan State Normal College—for a long time, a suitable name for the first State normal school in Michigan, founded in the spring of 1849 and originally named Michigan State Normal School. With the advent of other State normal colleges and schools, however, the need became increasingly apparent to re-christen our College with a name more descriptive of its location, and, consequently, by act of the State Legislature in the session of 1955, the College became Eastern Michigan College. The educational aims and objectives of the College were gradually undergoing modification and expansion too, and the State Legislature recognized this fact by approving the most important name change of all for the institution by granting it University status on June 1, 1959. This date marked the beginning of independent operation for the Graduate School at Eastern; and the creation and development of the College of Arts and Sciences and the College of Education followed rapidly.

The growth of Eastern's Graduate School has been truly remarkable. Twenty-five years ago, Eastern began offering courses for which the University of Michigan granted graduate credit. Offerings included courses in education, special education, history, geography, and science methods, and this cooperative plan continued for fifteen years. Ten years ago, the University was given permission to grant its own master's degrees, and 127 graduate students enrolled in the fall semester of 1953 at Eastern. Each semester has shown an increase in enrollment, and according to James H. Glasgow, Dean of the Graduate School, nearly 3,000 graduate students are enrolled, on and off campus, for the current fall semester. The Graduate Office has record cards for 11,100 students who have been admitted to the Graduate School, and more than 2,000 master's degrees have been granted. Ten years ago, only one graduate program was offered, for elementary school teachers. Today there are 19 programs, and additional programs are under study. The newest programs are art education, fine arts, business education, business administration, and physical education. Currently under study are programs in home economics, chemistry, mathematics, and music.

In 1961 the EMU Graduate Council approved the Ed.S. (Specialist in Education) degree, although the University has not yet received approval by the governing board to grant it. According to Dean Glasgow, "That there is a demand for graduate work beyond a master's degree is shown by the enrollment for the spring semester of 1963, when 9 per cent of the graduate students enrolled at Eastern held master's degrees. In the Middle West there are several institutions similar to Eastern, and they are offering doctoral degrees for teachers. It is probable that [our] University will follow their lead."

Julius M. Robinson, Director of Summer Session, reports that the total enrollment in summer session has increased each year since 1959, except in 1960 when there was a slight decrease of 1.5%. The graduate enrollment has increased consistently for the past five years, but the undergraduate enrollment surpassed the 1959 enrollment only in 1963. For the summer session of 1963, the graduate enrollment (head count) increased 18%, and the undergraduate enrollment also increased by the same rate.

ENROLLMENTS FOR SUMMER SESSIONS 1959-1963

Year	Graduate	Undergraduate
1959	766	1,457
1960	934	1,263
1961	1,136	1,388
1962	1,425	1,339
1963	1,680	1,580

The statistics in the table above include only the enrollments under the summer session budget. In addition to the regular summer session programs, since 1959 Eastern Michigan University has received National Science Foundation grants for courses in the areas of science and mathematics. Also, since 1960, a series of workshop courses have been developed under the auspices of Field Services to augment the regular summer session program. By adding the 268 students enrolled in the special programs for 1963, the total summer session enrollment for 1963 is 3,528, representing a 17% increase over that of 1962.

According to Dr. Robinson, the enrollment figures seem to indicate "that the graduate enrollment is expanding rapidly and will continue to expand in future years if the program is expanded. It also indicates that the undergraduate enrollment which has been on the decline during the last few years increased this past summer when the program was expanded. There were 25.5% fewer classes offered at the undergraduate level in the summer session of 1962 than in 1959. It seems reasonable to believe that the decline in the undergraduate enrollment during that period was caused by the curtailment of the undergraduate program. It is also safe to conclude that the undergraduate enrollment will increase in future years if the undergraduate program is adequately expanded."

Worthy of particular note are the increasing number and quality of the special programs and workshops offered during the summer at Eastern. Increased support is being given to the idea that one of the objectives of the summer session program should be to provide certain types of courses that may not, or perhaps cannot be offered or that students are not able to enroll in during the regular school year. The National Science Foundation courses in science and mathematics for elementary and high school teachers represent a case in point. These programs not only help fill a gap in learning for students enrolled in them, but they are also offered at probably the only possible time that full-time on-the-job teachers could take part in them.

In connection with the necessity for increased concern for the scheduling of classes at convenient times and hours for degree candidates who hold full-time jobs, Dr. Robinson believes that there is considerable evidence that evening classes are in demand at Eastern during the regular summer session. Many degree candidates who hold full- or part-time jobs in the Ypsilanti-Detroit area wish to complete their degrees by taking only evening courses. Because of the long period of time involved in completing work toward a degree in this manner, it would be helpful if evening courses were offered throughout the year. Quick to recognize this particular need, the Department of Business (formerly Business Studies) offered more than twenty evening courses in the summer of 1963.

French class

There are now approximately 300-400 students enrolled in evening undergraduate courses each semester, according to William Brownrigg, Director of Academic Advising, and in the last ten years there has been a change in the kinds of students enrolling in these courses. Ten years ago, the two-year State Limited Certificate for teachers was still being granted, and the evening course enrollment consisted mainly of recipients of these certificates who took evening courses in an attempt to further their education and/or to qualify for a degree. The State Limited Certificate program was dropped at Eastern in 1959, and now there are more and more evening students who are not teachers, and the numbers consist of more and more beginning freshmen or people who are employed locally full- or part-time in business and industry. Accordingly, the kinds of courses being offered have changed, e.g., more introductory courses are available in the evening.

The division of Field Services has recently compiled a ten-year report on their services. Enrollment in correspondence courses in 1953 was 650, rose to a high in 1957-58 with 1,150, and its 1961-62 enrollment was 700. Attendance at non-credit workshops and conferences (exclusive of Adult Education workshops and conferences) has risen from less than 50 in 1953 to an amazing 5,975 in 1961-62. The number of bus drivers served in the bus driver training program has risen from approximately 700 in 1955-56 to approximately 3,000 per year now. In comparing graduate to undergraduate off-campus enrollment over the last ten years, it was noted that the undergraduate enrollment is decreasing steadily while the graduate enrollment is increasing.

It is impossible to describe all changes and evidences of growth in every instructional department and curriculum in an article of this size, and there are a great many to cite. A major recent change in curricula was the creation of some 30-hour majors and 20-hour minors. More emphasis is now being placed on greater concentration in a student's field of specialization, and more courses are being developed to meet this need. Many departments have developed honors courses. The general education program, which was created in 1954-56 and first implemented in 1956-57, has undergone continuous study and improvements are still being considered by the Faculty Council's Instructional Problems Committee. New majors (such as the majors in political science and in sociology) and new minors (such as the philosophy minor and dance minor) have been added, and new curricula for (1) Business Technicians, (2) General Home Economics, and (3) Technical Draftsmen have been adopted within the last ten years.

The creation of a new department, the Psychology Department, was approved by the State Board in July 1962, and Robert L. Anderson was appointed acting head. Richard H. Lindley, formerly of Trinity University, San Antonio, will become the first permanent head of the department as of February 1964. Approval for the establishment of separate departments of English and Speech was granted by the State Board at its October 1962 meeting. (See the March 1963 issue of the Alumni Newsletter for details.)

Several new department heads were appointed during the last year. Warren A. Joseph, formerly of Bowling Green University, replaced Haydn Morgan as head of the Department of Music (Mr. Morgan will continue to teach in the department as a professor), Keith Bowen succeeded Lloyd Olds as head of the Department of Health, Physical Education, Recreation, and Athletics (see March 1963 Alumni Newsletter for details), and Mrs. Anita Fielder was appointed professor and head of the Home Economics Department in August of this year, replacing Susan M. Burson, who recently retired. The appointment of James W. Gousseff as professor and director of theatre in the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts became effective September 1, 1963. Dr. Gousseff replaces William Work, who has been named first permanent executive secretary of the Speech Association of America.

Eastern's teacher education program continues to be strong and vital (see the March 1963 Alumni Newsletter for a recent and interesting study of Eastern's laboratory schools) and indeed merits many more words than can be devoted to it in this article. Eastern is especially proud of its teacher education program's continued association with the Somali Republic. In September of 1962, EMU and the Agency for International Development, a branch of the U.S. Department of State, signed a contract which provides that several members of the EMU faculty will give technical advice and assistance for the improvement of teacher education in the Somali Republic during the next three years. The contract is the result of a preliminary survey made in the summer of 1961 by R. Stanley Gex, Dean of the College of Education at Eastern, and Ronald J. Slay, professor of education. Under the terms of the contract, faculty members selected for the project will assist in both pre-service and inservice preparation of teachers, will advise the Ministry of Education on teacher training and elementary education, and will prepare Somali specialists at the Teacher Training Institute in Afgoi, Somali. Dean Gex was assigned as chief of party for the project, and his staff includes Eugene H. Freund, Robert S. Robinson, Edmond W. Goings, (faculty members at Eastern), Marion Gibbins, and Jacqueline M. Henderson, project secretary. Thomas O. Monahan, associate professor of education at Eastern, was named campus coordinator for the project, and maintains an office in Pierce Hall. Dean Gex anticipates renegotiation of the contract after its expiration date in 1965. The aim of the project is to develop Somali educational programs and facilities to the point where they can be locally operated within six years.

Created within the last ten years as an extension of the Library services, the Audio-Visual Center in Ford Hall stocks many audio-visual materials and grants borrowing privileges to faculty members and student teachers who may use any of the audio-visual services for instructional purposes.

The closed-circuit television system at Eastern is also a recent innovation. Its three major uses are: direct instruction of University students by or about TV; observation of speech correction clinical procedures and laboratory school classes; and demonstration on request in all areas of instruction. Quirk, Roosevelt, Pierce, Strong, and Rackham are the five University buildings now able to receive closed-circuit television.

The total enrollment for the fall semester of 1963, as of September 18, was 7,209, and is expected to rise slightly with late registration. Of the 7,209, 5,979 are undergraduate students, and 1,230 are graduate students. The total of new students, including transfers and freshmen, is 2,054. This represents an increase of 1,123 students over the spring semester of 1963.

Enrollment is expected to reach 10,000 by 1968, and Eastern is eager and willing to meet the challenges that such an expansion will involve. We hope we have shown in this article and expect to show in the next two articles that Eastern has made considerable strides in the last ten years. Moreover, everyone at Eastern is confident that Eastern will continue to develop in every possible way.
