On this day...On this day in 1928 - "Time" magazine presented its cover in color for the first time. The subject was Japanese Emperor Hiroh

Quote: "Here's to the crazy ones, the misfits, the rebels, the troublemakers, the round pegs in the square holes... the ones who see things differently -- they're not fond of rules... You can quote them, disagree with them, glorify or vilify them, but the only thing you can't do is ignore them because they change things. They push the human race forward, and while some may see them as the crazy ones, we see genius, because the ones who are crazy enough to think that they can change the world, are the ones who do." - Steve Jobs

Fact: J. Howard Miller (1918 – 2004) was an American graphic artist who painted posters during World War II in support of the war effort, among them the famous "We Can Do It!" poster, frequently misidentified as Rosie the Riveter. Rosie represented the six million women who worked in manufacturing plants on the home front which produced munitions and material during WWII while the men (who traditionally performed this work) were away fighting in the war.

Miller studied at the Art Institute of Pittsburgh, graduating in 1939 and resided in Pittsburgh during the war. Miller may have based the "We Can Do It!" poster on a United Press International picture taken of Geraldine Doyle working at a factory. At the time of the poster's release the name "Rosie" was not associated with the picture; that came after 1982 when the poster was rediscovered in the U.S. National Archives.
