CHEMISTRY CLUB

The annual trip of the Chemistry Club to Detroit Friday, May 14, was one of the best, if not the best, of any four years. After busyness starting, including Professors Peri and Craig, the club visited the Ford Motor Co., in Highland, and the Ford Motor Co. guide took the members through different parts of the plant, explaining the various stages of construction. Although they learned about Ford and the plant, some members were surprised to see a Ford plant together. The club also visited a company that was the largest in the business area, and that was the Ford Motor Co.

After lunch, at the Cadillac Hotel, the party visited the Detroit Institute of Technology, including the building works, the motor rooms, and the beautiful grounds and plants in their beautiful basins. The plants that were visible growing there were the largest in the United States.

The idea of this visit was to see the largest in the business area, and that was the Ford Motor Co., and to see the beautiful basins with their plants in their beautiful basins.

The next stop was the Buick Motor Co., in Highland, where the members visited the Ford Motor Co., in Highland, and the Ford Motor Co. guide took the members through different parts of the plant, explaining the various stages of construction.

THE NORMAL COLLEGE
WHY AND WHERE
AN ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT OF
MEV'S ENID FOR A ST. CLAIR
CO. ALUMNI BANQUET

The normal college of the country are being called upon to fill a new need. That need is to bridge the constantly widening gap between the American high school and the American university—a gap that is full of pitfalls even for the wary. This gap is not as much academic or scholastic as it is social and psychological. It is a sudden step from social and mental discipline of home and school, education though absolute freedom and unrestrained. The effect upon the average youth with the adolescent inability to choose for himself is indescribable evident. Every year an increasing large number of freshmen are dropped from their rosters of our universities and the reason is not lack of mental ability but a lack of ability to choose that which is best from the varied and often gradually colored programs of university life.

The time was when a man stepped directly into the university from the high school. He found there less contrast and less discipline, it is true, but the student bodies were small and the first hands of men who were really teachers in the true sense of the world were ready to guide where the way was hard. But American universities have changed in two ways and both these changes, although unavoidable, perhaps, have been to the detriment of the adolescent matriculate. First, they have increased their standards so that anything like close, fatherly supervision, even on the part of the best-intentioned of the professors, is impossible. Second, the major part of the increased attendance has been in the professional departments and the demands for specialization have called into the teaching profession a host of specialists who, by very virtue of the fact that they are specialists, can never be truly teachers. Even those professors who have the teaching instinct find specialization forced upon them to that they never come into any real contact with a student until he has passed through the formative first two years of his college life. The result is that, except in rare instances, the freshmen and sophomores at our great universities get their class work at the hands of student quizmasters or graduate instructors whose experience is limited and whose ideas are too undeveloped to find expression in their teaching.

The first two years of college life are formative years—years in which the student is building up a structure of ideas and ideas that will make or break him in the years to come. The building of a properly balanced structure involves a formation in the knowledge of those things that are essential to the existence of a well poised social whole. No half-trained quiz-master can lay that foundation and no inexperienced graduate student can preserve its perfect balance. Only the ablest minds of men and women, who are recognized not only as leaders in their various fields as true teachers in their ability to combine leadership and idealism with the actual teaching of their specialties, the American university can do. The argument is often advanced that, dangerous though the sudden elimination of restraint may be the compensation of university life is such as to make this first objection invalid. These advantages are listed as the great lectures, (Continued on page 46)
