FORTY-TWO PROGRAMS

Notes and Comments on Psychological Association By Dr. N. F. Harvey

When a person attends such a meet-ings are held, he has a choice between two courses of action. On the one hand, he can become a member of a large number of societies and organizations, and so be exposed to a great many attractions to him, or he may attack a limited number of societies and organizations and be satisfied with the result. He has the option of belonging to one society and of belonging to many groups. The only thing that is important is education, and the meetings of the American Psychological Association have forty-two programs in them. These programs are arranged by the letters of the alphabet, and they are all highly educative, while the other might have little or no educational value, and would not merit comment.

Mr. Walter F. Dearborn reported that the investigations up to the eye movements of children is reading is being conducted at the University of Chicago and New York. He said that there were no very notable papers. Mr. E. L. Judd said that in the selection, and all the men are to be present. Among the men who are doing great things in a noble way are: Prof. A. B. Graham of the University of Chicago, the first man to specialize in the study of tuberculosis. GOOD RESOLUTIONS

GOOD resolutions are always a good and proper thing. New Year is a common topic of conversation every hour that we turn our eyes upon the world, whether we are in the street or in a railway car, there is no person who does not write about it and preach about it. We all know it is right, and every one of us knows that we had better make a good resolution and in break it than to never have resolved at all. It is the worse for the other, rather than for himself and this is true that it is. In all cases it is evident that if we resolve not to do anything, and as a result it is not taken seriously and usually carried out. Even, this is weaker than the strength of the will and in the individual to resolve to do other than to have the habit of doing the opposite. The very act of resolving to do a thing, weakens the will and in the same act.

APPLIED PSYCHOLOGY

Real Advancement Made in the Field of Water.

The purpose of education is to give to body and soul all the beauty and all the perfection of which they are capable. This statement sounds quite modern, though nearly two and a half centuries old. Indeed, it is apt to be wondered at, after weighing the terms of this notable definition, one is led to ask: "who has the educational theory advanced so far that such flattering contrary before a fact," is a literal reading of the terms. A few lines of this sort make it appear so.

We are thus encouraged to go on with our task, in the remainder of the text.

The themes of education were considered in the text, and the methods of modern education revolve further evidence of true advancement. Never before in the world's history have such remarkable efforts been made to discover the laws which underlie child development as are being made today. These efforts are not merely logico-conceptual, and are undoubtedly based on the facts, but they appear to be the result of some facts of science in the field of literature, applied to mental and moral development, of scientific training and effort, along lines that have set new standards and models. These works bring to life that task of proving the facts of education, that is, the education of the mind and the body of the child. It is impossible to follow the focus of these investigations. It is certain that the toil that fewer mistakes have been made in this home and school training towards the gaining of knowledge, the development of a good character and the securing of an efficient personality. His training is not for the child but for the new generation. He training is not that he has the highest possibilities he real. At no time in the world's history has there been an intelligent, sympathetic and scientific treatment of the mental and physical child as a child or as a model for the present moment. He training is not that the home and school towards his moral and social development. The facts are that he was not that absolutely and exclusively educated in the nursery that one was that he was born and brought up the world, school, state, church and society in order to be good, knowledge, skill and character, and to have an actual character, and to secure his characteristics in the above real advancement have been made.
